Such studies will employ multiple recording techniques: simultaneous EEG, EOG, EMG, and HEOG, single neuron unit extracellular recording, high- speed pulse-labeling of single units during active behavior, electrical stimulation of single neurons, and single unit analysis. We propose to devote most effort to developing custom-built analysis and display software for use in the Core, augmented by some off-the-shelf software and hardware. To provide these services in a cost-effective manner, we will use a robust, easily maintainable, modular and flexible computing platform based upon the Unix operating system. In particular, we propose to develop and maintain within the Core a Unix workstation running a high-performance graphics display and analysis software package called Neurolucida. The primary usage of the Core will be with the multi-electrode or single unit recording techniques, or the analogue, digital, and video-based methods for high-speed optical identification of single units.
